Did You See the PINK BALLOONS?

April 1st was PINK SHIRT DAY across Saskatchewan. The Rocanville School Peer Facilitators organized a school wide balloon release to recognize anti-bullying day. All staff and students from kindergarten to grade 12, dressed in pink, congregated by the playground and released pink balloons into the sky. The high school students were then invited to join in a school wide 'operation playground' where the older students participated in playground activities with the elementary students during morning break. Throughout the day, the Peer Facilitators read strong messages to the entire school reminding the students of the serious impact that bullying has on everyone. The students were also challenged to be Gossip Free for the day and to consider how often gossip occurs and how it impacts others. The hope is that someday there will be no bullying. The Peer Facilitators are now in the process of doing classroom presentations to the elementary classes on bullying to engage the students in conversation to discuss and understand the seriousness of bullying in our school and community. The Rocanville School Peer Facilitators would like to send a huge THANK YOU to Goodman Steel and Praxair for generously providing helium to fill our pink balloons.

Interested in joining our Gapland community? We will be looking for volunteers to work the door and merchandise table, and for Non Skating Officials, for May 23. "Non Skating Official" can sound intimidating, but it's not all that complicated. If you can count, run a timer on your phone, write on a white board... well, you're hired! Are you credit savvy? Understanding the benefits of a Tax-Free Savings Account

A better understanding of how to use credit properly can improve overall financial health.

What is your reaction to the term "credit"?

Excitement over an upcoming purchase? Tension because of the burden of repayment? Without a firm grasp of credit and how it works, you may feel a mix of emotions when facing a purchase decision or financial situation where credit is needed – and that's understandable. But credit can be useful; it just needs to be managed correctly.

What is credit?

Credit is a contractual agreement with a lender that gives the borrower access to money, with the understanding that it will be paid back in the future, plus interest. Types of credit include mortgages, credit cards, loans and lines of credit.

Mortgages and loans involve a bank or financial institution lending a specific amount, with an agreement on the repayment schedule and interest rate. Credit cards and lines of credit are account-based. You can make purchases or pay bills using these accounts, up to a set limit. Both have minimum balances that must be paid off by a specified date each month. Because credit cards typically have higher interest rates, lines of credit may be a better option for larger purchases, as there's usually a lower cost for carrying a balance.

How credit works

When you need to purchase something that's either too expensive or more immediate than your cash flow allows, credit comes into play. For example, for most Canadians, it's more realistic to make monthly mortgage payments than to pay for a home all at once.

Your credit score is your track record of how diligently you have paid down previous loans and credit accounts. Lenders look at factors such as your assets, your employment situation and your credit score to decide your borrowing limits and terms. This is why it's so important to keep up with payments. A credit report is a detailed document containing your credit history and credit score, kept by Canada's credit-reporting agencies (Equifax or TransUnion). Both agencies recommend checking your report at least once a year to ensure there are no inaccuracies and that your score is in a good range, especially if you are planning a big purchase. You can request a copy directly from the agencies, either by mail (free) or online (for $15 to $25).

Interested in learning more? The Financial Consumer Agency of Canada offers a useful reference guide called "Understanding your credit report and credit score." You can find it at www.fcac-acfc.gc.ca.

Tips to build and maintain good credit

To build and keep a good credit score (or fix a bad credit score):

- Pay bills in full and on time; if you can't make a payment in full, pay at least the minimum amount
- Stick to your limit on credit cards; try to keep the balance well below the limit
- Make sure account statements are correct; if you notice unauthorized transactions, notify your creditor immediately

- Pay off debts as quickly as possible

Sharing credit

In some cases, there may be advantages to sharing credit. You can share credit with a spouse, child or business partner through joint accounts or co-signed loans. Someone who is under the age of 18 or 19 (rules vary depending on your province's age of majority) cannot apply for credit on his/her own, but can be made an authorized user on an account. Keep in mind, however, that the primary borrower remains responsible for all purchases, balances and fees.

Joint accounts can simplify spending or improve your credit score, but it's important to remember that both parties' credit ratings can be affected positively or negatively and both people are responsible for paying off the amount owed, even if a relationship ends. The same applies if you co-sign a child's student loan, for example. While co-signing can help your child build a credit history, responsibility falls to the parent if the child can't pay back the full amount, with interest.

To encourage successful credit sharing, it's important to communicate about spending, develop an appropriate budget and make sure you can handle the debt.

Work with a professional

When you are properly informed, you can feel confident that you are choosing the best options to improve or maintain your overall financial health. Talk to your advisor or banking professional to learn more.
