Living on the edge

An open dialogue can help pave the way for long-term financial security.

One of the most important goals many parents set for themselves is to raise their children to be financially independent. And, by the time children reach their mid-to-late 20s, they're often earning an income and making their own financial decisions. However, they may still benefit from some gentle guidance about budgeting and debt.

The challenge for many people in their mid-20s is that they're experiencing so many "firsts": a first full-time job, a first apartment, a first car. The pace doesn't slow down in the late 20s, when they may be saving for a wedding, a house and all the expenses associated with starting a family of their own.

In the midst of this period of rapid change, there are regular expenses to pay – from groceries to utilities. There may be a student loan, a car loan and mortgage payments to make. In the months when income doesn't match expenses, credit card balances and other consumer debt may start to creep upwards.

The sooner young adults start balancing income and expenses and keeping debt to a minimum, the better positioned they will be for future financial success.

Here are tips on how to have a productive conversation with your children:

Take the initiative.

Some young adults are reluctant to bring up the subject of finances with their parents, but grateful when given an opportunity to discuss their concerns. Open the door with something like "We haven't talked about money in a while, and I want you to know that you can still come to me for advice whenever you need it."

Listen carefully.

Your children may give you clues that finances are becoming a struggle without coming right out and saying it. They may complain about a landlord being too tough on them. They may express anxiety about whether they will get a raise or a bonus at work. Probe to find out if financial stress is behind these comments.

Be open.

Tell your children about some of your own money challenges, today and when you were their age. This can help reassure them that you won't be judgmental, as well as giving you a chance to share some of your money management tips.

Offer objectivity.

Acknowledge that you don't have all the answers and, if appropriate, recommend that your children make an appointment to speak with your advisor. An advisor can provide expert advice – and young adults may be more comfortable talking about their financial situation with a professional.

By raising the topic, you can help young adults address small challenges before they become large or even insurmountable. It's one more way you can help set your children up for long-term financial success.
